The Local Query?

Ed. Conier.

We know that the locust lay their eggs in the branches of trees, and we also know that they come from holes in the earth. They are hatched in trees, how is it that they come out of the earth?

ANSWER.—The female has a saw-like appendage with which she cuts around the thin branch of a tree, and in this crevices she deposits her eggs. The twigs never more than a foot long, however, dry out and drop to the ground, carrying the eggs with them. Soon after this, the young burrow to the juicy root of a tree and their remains and roots drop off, the eggs remain in until they are hatched and the roots fall to the ground and take the course just described.

EVERYBODY should be on the lookout for mad dogs. There are numerous all over the country. A dog is a most dangerous animal, especially when it has been long, a rabid dog, to which a person must not drop off, the eggs remain in until they are hatched and the roots fall to the ground and take the course just described.

THE HICKMAN COURIER.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

Let the Democratic Party Name the Changes Proposed.

It is presumed that the most intelligent, progressive and best thought of Kentucky favors a new constitution.

And yet the proposition has been and is again and again voted to the vote of the people, and we often hear rejected or failed.

In view of the circumstances past, the two great political parties, the Democratic and Republicans, representing approximately all the voters of the State, in their State conventions, have resolved in favor of the proposed Constitutional Convention.

What then?

The friends of a new constitution give different reasons for the failure, chief of which is the indifference of the people in voting.

The law is to the voter, year by year, to vote, or any other proposition known to him, to be brought with improvements, benefits, and prosperity.

The Courier says that the mass of Kentucky voters are uninformed as to the changes needed and desired, and therefore do not understand or appreciate the promised benefits from such changes.

This is largely true, but the people, though uninterested, are not necessarily repelled upon either, because the average voter whose mind is occupied with his farm, or daily work, is not likely to be comforted to be continually reading and well read up as to any defects of his State constitution.

The Courier also says that the people, as to any changes

they may be made, are in distrust of a convention accompanied with the reforming of the people, there comes another potent cause, and this an argument of infinite weight.
